

kick-starts powwow season

Dancers gathered in Denver once again for the Denver March Powwow, held annually in the Denver Coliseum. This year's gathering took place from March 23 to 25, drawing veterans and drum groups from across the country. Southern Ute Royalty made full representation, along with Jr. Miss Indian Colorado Serena Fournier, also hailing from the Southern Ute Indian Tribe. Ushered in by the sound of drums, the Grand Entry filled the coliseum with energy as dancers represented their respective tribes. The Coliseum also boasts one of the largest Indian markets in the region, coinciding with the cultural event.
